

Marea Urbana - Urban Tides

The project is proposing an utopian urban park at the north corner of the old city wall of Cartagena, Colombia. The site is found to be un-use during both day and night. The location is at the junction of two busy roads. The urban park is acting as a invisible barrier between the new and old cities, creating a contrast and utopia location for people to relax and chill. The water introduced and mangroves growing around helps cooling down the space. With the connection of the Caribbean Sea and Del Cabrero Lake, the tide of infrastructure helps to connect the park across the busy road and also the park over the river. The canopy with light colour fabric helps to invite people to walk through in a shading condition which is very essential in the daytime all over the year in Cartagena.
